Riego tradicional o a manto

A collection of handwritten signatures and initials in black ink. On the left, there is a signature that appears to be 'Summo' with a checkmark below it. To its right are several other signatures, including one that looks like 'J. D.', a large circular signature, and a signature that ends in '972'. There are also some smaller, less legible initials scattered around.
